
2009. Participatory forest management and its impacts on livelihoods and forest status: The case of Bonga forest in Ethiopia. International Forestry Review 11(3): 346–358. CrossRefGoogle Scholar. Habashi, F. 1996. Small-scale surface mining in Ghana is on the increase with its subsequent repercussions on the environment. Impacts of migration on mining communities: According to the report from the International Institute for Environment and Development (IIED, 2002), one of the most significant impacts of mining activities on mining communities is the migration of people into the mining communities, especially in the cases of developing countries where the mine is the dominant and viable economic activity in that area. Ghana is currently Africa's second largest gold producer after South Africa, with gold exports... accounting for over 40% of total export earnings (Tschakert & Singha 2007). 3. Forestry Commission Regulating the use of forest and wildlife resources, conserving and