A particular result of the development of case-law in this field is that the courts have not been slow to entertain the institution of ancillary proceedings where these are appropriate. The question of whether the ancillary jurisdiction may take a lead in the proceedings is one that has often been put, especially where the connexion of the foreign company is greater with the ancillary jurisdiction. Privacy in Australian law is not an absolute right and there is no clearly recognised tort of invasion of privacy or similar remedy available to people who feel their right to privacy has been violated. Privacy is, however, affected and protected in limited ways by the Australian common law and a range of Commonwealth, state and territorial laws, and administrative arrangements. The New Zealand Law Commission said of privacy in Australian law in 2009
